Social Facts

The reality of social facts emerges from their consequences for social structure. Social facts are regular patterns in the social structure of interaction between the people, groups, communities and cultures that make up a society. Or as old dead sociologist Emile Durkheim put it:

"A social fact is any way of acting, whether fixed or not, capable of exerting over the individual an external constraint; or, which is general over the whole of a given society whilst having an existence of its own, independent of its individual manifestations." – Emile Durkheim, The Rules of the Sociological Method, 1904"
